Thanks for this. The reporter called me Friday asking for specific acreage, which maps we used, etc. I pointed him to the interim and final reports, noted everyone was able to submit comments and materials, and that we had no new announcements on the review.

Downey, tomorrow morning's Salt Lake Tribune is likely running a story about the State of Utah's input to DOI regarding the Bears Ears Monument. The story follows the disclosure this past week, pursuant to a government document request, of certain documents including the maps that we provided to you. I gave an interview to the reporter who is writing the story. His questions concerned our reasons for the the various configurations and designations that are reflected on the maps. I made it clear that we have had no indications from DOI as to the final recommendations that went from the Secretary to the President regarding Bears Ears other than the information that has been made public. I will send you a copy of the article as soon as it appears.
